I actually would like if people in my community could learn the different types of music, to tell the difference between mambo and salsa and that will be common knowledge in the whole neighborhood. Instead of going to neighborhood events and having a dj, I would love if there could be a live band. | | | |
| Brooklyn | 11222 | Greenpoint | | | | | | | | | How will the increase of art and culture venues affect the cost of housing? Will we be having galleries and selling expensive art as in Chinatown and the LES where these spots go from renting at $13K/month to $20-30K, elevating rental prices in the neighborhood? Have to prevent the increase of cultural spots from making it impossible for artists to live and work in their neighborhoods. However, Bushwick has been impacted drastically by gentrification and a lot of its character has disappeared. | I think that the concept of art and culture could be difficult to describe, but knowing as a community organizer at Make The Road New York in Bushwick, I can only say that the increase of new residences/tenants has brought a lot of changes in terms of art and culture movements. For me it's like the introduction of contemporary art (murals, visual art, etc.) has been taking the character of Bushwick. Traditions from the Latino community have been ridden away. | | | | |

We need more indoor public space for winter! | We have mostly small businesses and other artists live there but this is changing. | 1) We need a sustainable funding model for culture which includes increased government funding. 2) We need a pipeline so people who graduate from our 1st class art schools can find jobs that pay a living wage. 3) More public art that is performative and/or interactive, not just visual. 4) Arts and cultural workers need more competitive salaries. 5) We need more women in top level artistic roles, i.e. curators, producers, writers, directors, etc. across all disciplines. 6) We need to stop calling mental differences a disability and embrace new language such as neurodiversity. | | | |

| Brooklyn | 11208 | East New York | Williamsburg | SI | | Yes | Yes | Yes | We need affordability, most important thing. | Diversity, affordability | I feel the Cultural Plan needs to strongly address the multiple issues faced by working artists in NYC. We are being priced out of our living working spaces, and I hope the Plan makes some very bold recommendations to the NYC administration to address these issues. The rent crisis affects workplaces in manufacturing zones and apartments in poor and working class neighborhoods. We, artists, live and work in these communities. We are also facing a crisis of employment. The adjunct teaching paycheck, and free labor flowing from us to the non-90-10-profit sectors are threatening our existence in NYC. | | | |

However, we desperately need a place specifically for artists to gather, talk and create. | It's history | I have been very involved in advocating for the arts (over 28 years) and I formed my own arts organization to help make exhibition, performing and developing for artists in Harlem. However, without enough funding it has been difficult to continue to grow our organization and advocate for the arts. I traveled across the the-Henrietta Park Mall this year. I love live performances in all parks. Also would be great to have more communal arts cultures with cafes and bars that also have social spaces. Places to be Creative: I think so but not sure how many are open/participatory for the public and it is best for artists within the artist space is also important. Activities and Events: Again believe so but don't spend much time in multi-generational spaces. Would be good | I feel as though my neighborhood does support the arts but as a gentrified neighborhood. We also have that tension as part of that we contain some of the Brooklyn's larger cultural orgs, and institutions (esp. #2). With this comes a burden of responsibility to ensure Equity within these orgs and access to them. | 1) transportation is a huge issue in Brooklyn 2) communal/third/multi-use arts space is important 3) please no more glass temples UNLESS they have callabars that are open from dawn to dusk, have more theater performance spaces of varying size, and are open to public and community run classes as well as the "Chosen art". 4) more multi-year arts funding for mid-scale orgs. to allow strategies planning for sustainability. 5) more easily accessible first-time grants for groups and individuals who perhaps do not have the monopoly self generate funding for their work re: recognized by "the expert" (i.e more important trust-based funding to get people started | | | |

Most of my friends meet Manhattan or Bushwick (which is easy to reach through Manhattan from Ditmas Park.) | The elderly immigrant neighbors give the place soul. | I have a friend who is a dancer and rollerblader from Paris. She gets a yearly artist stipend from her government, with the requirement that she performs in a few shows/year and shows artistic activity in France. That stipend allows her live as an artist and travel the world - NYC, South American countries, dancing companies, teaching, state dance and spreading culture. | | | |
